We have the ability to search by location with geolocation functionality. You can block this or change this in your browser settings.

Geolocation settings in Google Chrome

The screenshot shows a web browser window with the URL `mycoloradojourney.com/customer-portal/educational-programs?address=1815%2520S%2520Saulsbury%2520Ct%2520C%2520Lakewood%2520C%2520CO%252080232%2520C%252...`. The page displays a 'Program Finder' form with the following fields:

- Program Name or Provider Name:
- Address:
- Program Type:
- Format:
- Training:
- WIOA Eligible:
- Cost:
- Provider Type:
- Toggle: Saved

A 'Location access allowed' notification is displayed over the form, indicating that the site can access the user's location. The notification includes the following options:

- Continue allowing this site to access your location
- Always block https://www.mycoloradojourney.com from accessing your location

The notification also features 'Manage' and 'Done' buttons. A blue circle highlights the notification, and a line points from it to a text box on the right.

On Google Chrome, you can do this from the URL address. It tells you when location access has been enabled.

Geolocation settings in Safari

The screenshot displays the Safari browser interface with a geolocation permission modal. The modal text reads: "mycoloradojourney.com" would like to use your current location. Below this, there are three buttons: "Allow", "Don't Allow", and "Remember my decision for one day". The background shows the "Program Finder" page with search filters for Program Name or Provider Name, Address, Program Type, Format, Training, WIOA Eligible, Cost, and Provider Type. A "Search" button is visible at the bottom right of the search filters.

On Safari, you'll get a modal that asks your permission to do this. You can remember the decision for only one day, if you'd prefer.

Our Help Center has an article and a video about the changes and can be shared with your staff as well as job seekers looking to access the ETPL
